Volkmann opens new laboratory to test vacuum conveying of powders and small particles

(Bristol, PA) Volkmann, Inc. has completed expansion on its U.S. headquarters, located in Bristol, PA, and now offers customers a new, 750 square foot dedicated test facility. This laboratory incorporates a range of the company's VS Series of vacuum conveyors, including the 200, 250, 350 and 450 receiver models, as well as a variety of feed hoppers along with the company's RNT rip and tip hopper. Two 150 foot runs of 1 ½" and 2 ½" conveying lines are available to simulate real world applications in product transfer, and a 20 foot vertical lift can be added where necessary.

The VS series can be used to simulate conveying conditions for powders, granules, particles, tablets and capsules for customers in the food, pharmaceutical, chemical and coatings industries. A PPCVS 170 unit, built specifically for the pharmaceutical industry with a one-piece, gap free design and polished stainless steel surface, is also available and can be used to test product when necessary.

“We now have the ability to test all sizes of our conveyors and all but the largest vacuum pumps in house,” states Volkman president, Nick Hayes. “This gives us the opportunity to demonstrate production processes for our customer and iron out any adjustments which might be needed within our laboratory before installation.”
