Volkmann hires additional sales engineer to further support its growing sales in North and Central America

Bristol, PA – April 10, 2018: Volkmann, Inc., a market leader in powder and small particle vacuum conveying, is pleased to announce the appointment of David Sanchez as one of its Sales Engineers, further expanding its support of the North and Central American markets. David will join the sales team in the company's Bristol, PA facility and will be responsible for the generation of sales for Volkmann equipment as well as adding a level of depth for its controls section.

David Sanchez, Sales
Engineer, Volkmann, Inc.

David holds a BS in Mechanical Engineering from Drexel University having completed their highly acclaimed Co-Op program. He is an experienced mechanical engineer with extensive B2B sales as well as a process engineering and controls background. He also has the practical experience of site team supervision with large scale industrial machinery. A US native and fluent Spanish language speaker, David adds a new dimension to Volkmann, enabling it to enhance support levels for the Mexican and Central American markets.

“We are delighted to add David to our team,” notes Volkmann president, Nick Hayes. “As our business has grown, we have developed the need for additional sales staff. David’s ability to work throughout our complete coverage area is a major benefit for our clients and represents a further development in our North and Central American Division.
